

Your shutters, watching the weather so you don't have to.

A storm no one forecast is twenty minutes out. The family's at work and school, the shutters are open, and nobody's coming to close them. Keldoris already did.

Motorized shutters are only as good as the person who remembers to close them. Keldoris is the piece that decides when — and acts on its own, so it acts whether or not anyone's there to press a button.

1 It watches

Reads the wind and rain right at your home, minute by minute — not a forecast from a distant airport.

2 It warns first

Before anything moves, a 30-second spoken countdown plays, your phone alerts, and the porch lights flash. Anyone can tap HOLD to stop it.

3 It closes

The shutters close on their own — no app, no scramble — even when you're away from home.

4 It tells you

You get a clear message of exactly what it did, with a reminder to give the shutters a quick look. Honest, every time.

Why it's different

- It decides, not just obeys. Other "smart" shutters give you an app button you still have to press. Keldoris watches the weather and acts automatically.
- It's hyperlocal. It's built to react to the fast pop-up storm a regional forecast can miss — and closes even when no one's home to notice.
- It warns, it never slams. A clear warning comes first, and one tap on HOLD cancels the close — it won't shut on someone standing in a doorway.

One button by the door

A physical button by the door closes everything with a single press — no phone, no app. Simple enough for anyone in the house.

You still lead on the big ones

For a named hurricane, you close up early yourself with one tap. Keldoris is the everyday guardian — for the storms you don't see coming.

Best-effort automation — a helpful everyday guardian, not a life-safety or security device, and not a substitute for your own storm preparations. It can't guarantee a shutter closes or fully seals, and it always reminds you to verify by eye. Full terms & limits at keldoris.com/terms.
